

“It Takes A Whole Community to Create A Village” - Civic, Foundation, And Education Leaders Mark Milestone in Construction of the Herb Alpert Educational Village

On November 4th, 2011, New Roads School, the New Visions Foundation, benefactors Herb Alpert and Lani Hall Alpert, supporters, and community leaders celebrated construction of the Performing Arts and Leadership Center that forms the centerpiece of the innovative Herb Alpert Educational Village

Santa Monica, California (PRWEB) November 04, 2011 -- Members of the New Roads School community, together with the New Visions Foundation, benefactor Herb Alpert, supporters, and education and community leaders, gathered this morning to celebrate completion of the steel framing for the Performing Arts and Leadership Center that forms the centerpiece of the innovative Herb Alpert Educational Village. Located at 3131 Olympic Boulevard (the current site of New Roads High School and Middle School, Santa Monica campus) and named for its founding benefactor, The Herb Alpert Educational Village represents a vision for education in the 21st century – a model of collaboration and shared resources dedicated to incubating and implementing educational reform for an evolving world.

Under a tent facing the Performing Arts and Leadership Center structure, guests including Santa Monica Mayor Richard Bloom and Malissa Shriver, Chair of the California Arts Council, listened to comments by David Bryan, President and Head of School at New Roads; Paul Cummins, Executive Director of New Visions; and guest of honor, Herb Alpert. “We’ve waited 10 years for this day”, said David Bryan. Paul Cummins pointed out, “Along the way, we’ve had more ups and downs than the Brooklyn and Los Angeles Dodgers.”

Herb Alpert spoke about the root of his philanthropic endeavors: “One of the reasons I started the Herb Alpert Foundation in 1982, I was thinking, ‘If I can do it, you can do it. What’s the big deal?’ You have some extra change? Try to help others. That’s been my whole pursuit.”

“Paul [Cummins] has a unique concept about education, and it’s not just about the academics, it’s about getting the most out of the students. To appreciate their differences, and I think that is one of the keys...I think one of the reasons that I’m so excited about education is that I never had that [ah-ha!] feeling in my entire experience.”

At the conclusion of the formal ceremony, guests were escorted by members of New Roads School’s student council onto the construction site and the newly-poured concrete slab floor for theater where they signed the steel beams framing the stage.

The Performing Arts and Leadership Center, Phase 1 of construction, is central to the vision of The Herb Alpert Educational Village. In addition to its 350-seat theater (acoustics engineered by Disney Hall acoustician Yasuhisa Toyota) the “green” facility will house the Anne and Jerry Moss Theater, the Capshaw-Spielberg Center for Educational Justice, classroom space for New Roads School, plus office and meeting space for the New Visions Foundation and other non-profit organizations dedicated to working creatively and collaboratively towards common goals in educational advancement.
